MORE people want to emigrate from east London than almost anywhere else in the UK.

Figures from the Emigration Group show five per cent of all enquiries come from this region - second only in the UK to Birmingham.

Paul Arthur, director of organisation, said: "The current recession has certainly had an effect on migration, with Brits either unwilling to make any big decisions or postponing plans to emigrate due to the current economic climate.

- "However we have found that emigration enquiries have remained high with east London being an emigration hotspot."

Countries like Australia and New Zealand are proving the most popular destinations with Brits, with many spurred on by the financial slowdown in the UK.
