Business leaders called down under

THE Tasmanian Government is looking for Yorkshire business entrepreneurs to migrate down under.

As part of its quest it is working with migration specialist The Emigration Group and the National Bank of Australia, which owns Halifax-founded Yorkshire Bank, to hold a free seminar in Leeds, offering advice to potential business migrants.

Director of The Emigration Group, Paul Arthur, said: "Tasmania offers lots of opportunities for business people. "The economy is thriving and with the state government actively encouraging eligible migrants to come over and set up companies, it makes a great choice for entrepreneurs with sound business experience."

The island offers a range of business and employment opportunities for skilled and business migrants and with thriving manufacturing, farming and wine growing industries, the economy is continuing to grow.

The island also has Australia's lowest labour costs and labour turnover, the cheapest land and accommodation prices, as well as having one of the best rates of state taxes for businesses.

The free seminar is being held at Yorkshire Bank, Merrion Way, Leeds, on Thursday September 9 from 2pm.

It will cover a range of topics for business migration.
