Tasmania hunts for new blood

THE Tasmanian State Government is actively seeking entrepreneurs to live and work down under, working with leading migration specialists The Emigration Group and the National Bank of Australia to offer advice to potential business migrants.

Director of The Emigration Group, Paul Arthur said: "Tasmania offers lots of opportunities for business people. The economy is thriving and, with the state government actively encouraging eligible migrants to come over and set up companies, it makes a great choice for entrepreneurs with sound business experience."

The island boasts Australia's lowest labour costs and labour turnover, the cheapest land and accommodation prices, as well as having one of the best rates of state taxes for businesses.

Tasmanian Government Business Migration Project Manager, Tim Lovibond, added: "Our state is rich with opportunities for astute business operators and investors alike. We have the ability to deal one-on-one with business migrants and act as a pathway to other government services."

The free seminar is being held at the Yorkshire Bank on Merrion Way in Leeds on Thursday, September 9, from 2pm. There are 25 places and those who wish to attend must pre-book by calling 0845 230 2526 or visiting www.emigration-group.co.uk
