Unusual jobs for Britons in Australia

By MICHELLE RUSHTON

A LEADING emigration specialist has revealed that the South Australian government is hoping unusual jobs will attract Brits down under.

The Emigration Group based in Chester, has announced that the government have launched a recruitment drive to lure Britons to work in diverse jobs such as a Koala Catcher, Beer Taster, Shark Personality Profiler and Little Penguin Home Remodeller.

A survey conducted by the Australian government found that 60% of British employees were bored with their job and found that it rarely pushed them outside their comfort zone.

More than 70% of those surveyed said they never have an opportunity to leave the office.

The government is promising stressed and bored Brits the opportunity of the "ultimate work-life balance" and Brits who go to Oz on a working holiday visa are also eligible to work in some of the diverse jobs on offer.

Paul Arthur, Director of The Emigration Group said: "Many Brits who come to us looking to emigrate want to escape the stress and the long working hours we have in the UK and to achieve a better work life balance.

"The government's new recruitment drive showcases some of the interesting jobs Australia can offer and the more laid back lifestyle Brits can enjoy down under.

"Life in OZ can be a far cry from some of the 9 to 5 jobs we have over here!"

For more information on emigrating down under, The Emigration Group is holding a seminar in Warrington on Sunday, September 19.
